THIS WEEK I'VE CONTRIBUTED to my team's deliverables by implementing features in the main search view and in the detailed trip view. I know I've implied the former is "almost done" for a couple of weeks now but features and fixes that should be added to it just keep popping up. In any case, given the little time left of the project, we must very soon considerate it done. I've added map location look-up from search field input, made map markers draggable and added a map fragment in the detailed trip view, which shows the itinerary as line segments. I feel like I've got quite a lot done and it's overall been fun. I've also helped a few team members with smaller tasks during meetings.

As for Scrum contributions, during the meeting last Thursday I pushed a little for reflecting a little more on how we used the methodology, as I've felt we could be a little more disciplined when it comes to that. Admittedly, I find this hard in a flat hierarchy. The group has been better at using the scrum board, though. Using it and getting a detailed view of what others are working on is quite satisfying.

AS NEXT WEEK SEEMS TO BE basically the last production week, I've quite a lot I want to accomplish. Highest priority is obviously to finish implementing the app's basic functionality. This means at the minimum showing trips between Frederikshavn and Western Sweden. I'll help accomplish this wherever it's needed. The app could look a little better as well, though, and I hope I'm able to do some GUI polishing.
