

Individual reflection

This week I have worked on our user stories together with the rest of the group. We made our stories to small, most stories were basically tasks, after having made them to big in start of the project but we now feel that they are in a good middle spot after both our extremes. I have worked on both creating the mock data files that is meant to simulate the Stena Line api that we don't have access to and to parse the data files to the objects we are using in our design.

We had some problems with our Git in the start of the week which slowed our work down before we managed to fix the problem. Unfortunately had some difficulties with implementing one of the task I committed to do but hope that I can catch up and improve next week.
